A PROGRESSIVE LONE HAND.

In a few impressive words of admonition against entangling alliances Colonel Roosevelt breathes the spirit and wisdom of the Progressive Party.

No deals nor dickers anywhere. A lone hand for the Progressives in every legislature, in Congress, is a winning hand for the party to play. Let the Democrats and Republicans do all the dealing and dickering. Their machines have the interests of special privilege in common. The Progressive program is to stand aloof, "keeping unflinchingly to the principles we put down in the last campaign and showing by our works the faith that is in us."

That's the way to talk; that's the way to act! Along those lines the Progressive cause must advance with increasing momentum.

A GLIMPSE

He was an old man with a well-trimmed beard and tired eyes. His clothes were pressed. His linen was spotless. His bearing had in it that touch of patiently outside an office door and waited for admission so that he might seek work, the kind of clerical work, probably, over which such men as he have wasted the "years that the locust hath eaten." And as he stood without that door, so had he stood, perchance, without the doors of fortune; a patient you care to heed it, this Christmas spirit and troubled spirit amazed in a wordless way by the problems of life and never questioning the de- hold in common property. crees of providence.

LOS ANGELES' NEWEST NEAR-HORROR.

Only the other day The Times urged, as a protection to the public, that making and trafficking in high explosives and concealable weapons ought to be posal to receive point and emphasis in the nerveracking story from Los Angeles of a maniac's attempt to blow up a whole city block.

The public has not recovered from its horror over the Los Angeles Times crime; it is reading day by day the revelations of the nation-wide dynamite conspiracy of which even that astounding crime was the simple purpose of getting at the truth and securbut an incident. Only a few weeks have lapsed since the attempt of a madman on Colonel Roosevelt's life. These are only high spots in the procession of tragic events that almost daily emphasize the necessity for rigid measures of protection against pursuit of a case will accomplish. the possibility of such crimes.

The unrestricted making and selling of deadly may cart these instruments of death and horror about the country with impunity; the increasing disposition to cowardly crime of the sort that these instrumentalities make possible; these things must be reformed or the menace to life, property, and order will go on steadily increasing.

NO BATHTUB IMMUNITY.

In the latest of the long line of decisions construing and clarifying the scheme of the Sherman law, the United States Supreme Court again shows. as it so often has shown, that no harmful restraint of trade can be carried on without violating the terms of the anti-trust statute.

The Bathtub trust sought to shield its unlawful price agreements and other means of monopoly behind the rights conferred to it as the owner of licenses under the patent law. The Supreme Court like, and efficacious as the business that has been unanimously brushes aside this plea of immunity with the sharp remark that "the agreement clearly transcended what was necessary to protect the use of the patent or the monopoly which the law conferred upon it," and that "they accomplished a restraint of trade condemned by the Sherman law."

The subterfuge so condemned was always transparent. But it is to such feeble pleas that conspirators in restraint of trade are reduced by a continuous process of Supreme Court condemnation of technicalities resorted to in efforts to cheat the Sherman law. There is little left for the lawbreakers from the council; while if he undertook the direction to depend on when they are called to the bar. It will of Democratic destinies in Congress he would get not be long until, when they are caught "with the goods on," they will plead guilty and throw themselves on the mercy of the court.

mercial world of this country to a realization of its character.

For this method of "explaining" the development of cities and the existence of great trading centers depended upon the acceptance of the theory that those cities and centers were the result of purely natural advantages under the operation of which New York, for instance, came into being and multiplied because it sat in the lap of a great harbor accessible to the sea route from Europe, and St. Louis because it lies at the bend of a long river where the fur traders thought it convenient to land with their wares.

But, of recent years, the activities of the business men of Boston and Kansas City and Galveston and Seattle have been jolting the "economic interpretation of history" in a disrespectful way and the jolt has been getting so much "punch" into it that the members of the Merchants' Association of New York are actually organizing to "foster the trade and welfare" of that city.

When the merchants of New York are realizing that their trade has not come to them through the "natural situation" of their town or heaven's approval of their virtues, the "dismal science" is on its

A CHRISTMAS APPEAL.

Please, ladies, do your Christmas shopping now. Not that it makes any difference to the shops, but it does make a world of difference to the women who work in them.

It's a splendid theme that we celebrate at Christmas and it is our custom here to celebrate it greatly; but it has its burden of service as well as its benefits of gifts, and we can make its spirit sweeter by giving thought today to that business of Christmas buying which most of us are prone to overlook until tomorrow.

These young women of the stores who stand just now as patient sentinels to your wishes have some fancies of their own to follow at this time of year, some modest hopes to realize that might seem, did you think of them, sublime in their simplicity.

If you make it so they will work until the line of midnight on Christmas eve to see subtle gentility which we associate always in our that you are satisfied; and if, by shopping minds with the defeated and the inefficient. He stood now, you make it otherwise they will be not unmindful of your forethought.

So, for the sake of these young women of the stores, we make this sentimental appeal quite frankly to your sentiments and, it will be a larger thing that each of us can

THE CONVICTION OF THE GUNMEN.

It is necessary to go back a few years to the long-drawn-out travesty on criminal procedure which was afforded by the Thaw trials to appreciate fully what a progression is marked by the conduct of the strictly regulated. It did not take long for the pro- cases growing out of the Rosenthal murder. It is a cause for national satisfaction that so much of improvement can have been effected in so short a time. The trials of Becker first, and of the four gunmen New Banner for Women later, were not made public spectacles to grace a metropolitan holiday. There seemed to be in the mind of the court and the prosecuting lawyers alike ing a verdict based on it. Justice Goff and District Attorney Whitman are entitled to divide honors and credit for what has been done. The district attorney has demonstrated what directness and vigor in the Even more important than that these five men have been convicted, is the fact that the underworld of New York has been given a demonstration that systems, pulls, alliances, and money will not stay the hand of justice. The circumstances surrounding these cases constituted an awful revelation of the possible deeps to which organized crime could drag down a great community. It seemed doubtful if the orderly execution of the law could be possible in such a situation. Yet out of this morass of corruption and degravity, there has a suffrage amendments at the recent elections. have been convicted, is the fact that the underworld contrivances and high explosives; the fact that men of New York has been given a demonstration that depravity there has come a most signal proof that law and justice cannot be overturned in an American community. It has been an inspiring and encouraging lesson to the whole nation.

It is to be admitted that the demonstration is not vet complete. The convicted men have yet before them the possibilities of appeals, retrials, and further appeals. Consistent with a proper adherence to the legal proprieties that safeguard the rights of every accused person, it is most to be hoped that the rest of these proceedings may be as prompt, businesstransacted in Justice Goff's court.

ARCHBALD'S TRIAL FIRST ON SENATE'S CROWDED PROGRAM

In spite of the fact that little legislation is usually enacted at the short session, the Senate is looking forward to an extremely busy winter.

case of Judge Robert W. Archbald, who will be tried on the impeach ment of the House, will be the first important matter considered. Nobody knows how long this will take. The Benate will reconvene as a court of impeachment at 12:30 Tuesday, Decemher 3. The House managers are expected to submit a reply to the answer of Archbald, filed about the close of last session. More than 100 witnesses will testify. The case will not be concluded, it is expected, until well along in January.

The proposed constitutional amend-The proposed constitutional amendment for a single term for the President will be pushed by Senator Works and Senator Cummins. President Taft and William J. Bryan, having come out for the one-term idea, additional interest will be given this question. Speaker Clark and Leader Underwood are for the one-term plan, it is understood, and so if it passes the Senate it will doubtless pass the House. The Kenyon-Sheppard bill to shut liquor out of dry territory is a special order in the Senate for December 17, it probably will pass the Senate, but its chances in the House are doubtful. The agricultural education bill will be pressed by Senator Page of Vermont, and the Department of Health bill will be urged by Senator Owen.

Appropriation bills will be disposed of largely in committee, and will have comparatively short shrift in the Senate proper.

"Girls always excel boys where painstaking care and application are involved. This is true outside the schools, as well as in them, although it is most noticeable in the school room, where the two sexes' achievements are brought into contrast.
